

Law & Order

"I find it fulfilling to find the one case that is directly on point and then successfully articulating that position to a judge."

Jennifer Olmedo-Rodriguez has always been intrigued by law. Her first class in constitutional law captured her imagination so much that she began competing in statewide debates on legal theory. And she hasn't slowed down since: "As a child, I was very organized, driven, ambitious and empathetic," she says. "Whenever my parents told me I couldn't do something, my immediate response was 'why?' These characteristics now afford me the opportunity to achieve my professional career goals." Currently, Olmedo-Rodriguez practices a full spectrum of commercial law, working exclusively as a litigator in state and federal courts on cases dealing with, among other things, banking regulations, UCC matters, non-solicitation agreements and multi-million dollar complex commercial foreclosure cases. She's presently being considered for a promotion to the counsel position, and looks forward to continuing her career at Buchanan Ingersoll & Rooney, PC, and providing top-quality legal representation to each and every one of her clients.

Quick Facts

Her blessing and curse: "I'm an utter perfectionist — that definitely has its pros and cons!"

Outside the world of cutting-edge corporate law: "I'm a definite foodie and enjoy watching anything on The Food Network!"

Words of wisdom: "Control the agenda!"

What you wouldn't guess: "I love challenges including trekking the Mendenhall Glacier in Juneau!"
